Issue 3 - August 2021

Foreword from Lord Brodie

In preparation for the first of the Inquiry's oral hearings which is due to begin on 20 September, I have been reflecting on their content and format. We will hear from witnesses who have experience of the hospitals with which the Inquiry is concerned. These witnesses will all be patients or family members of patients. Future hearings will hear from other witnesses in order to build a complete picture of the public concerns that caused the Inquiry to be set up.

Every public inquiry has terms of reference which define what it is that the Inquiry must do and ours are on our website. It is my responsibility, as Chair of the Inquiry, to see that it fulfils its terms of reference, in other words that the Inquiry does what the terms of reference instruct it to do.

I consider it essential to begin by setting out to understand the experience of patients and their families and what the impact of that experience has been. This is for the simple reason that the Inquiry's terms of reference require us to investigate matters adversely impacting on patient safety and care – we therefore need to find out from patients and families what their perception of these impacts have been.

The first hearing is for patients and families to tell us their stories. We appreciate that they have gone through difficult times and indeed may still be doing so. We have no intention of adding to the stresses that they have already suffered. September will be about listening in order to guide us in fulfilling the Inquiry's terms of reference. We believe that the evidence of patients and families will do that.

Chair

How witnesses are supported during hearings

We understand that giving evidence at hearings may be emotional and difficult for anyone, especially patients and families. We will work hard to make the process of appearing at a hearing as smooth as possible. Our Witness Engagement and Support Team are on hand to help those who give evidence.

Members of the Witness Engagement and Support Team have been speaking with individual patients and their families. Each patient or family has a named team member specifically for them. The team supports witnesses who engage with the Inquiry, ensuring they understand what is involved in providing evidence, giving statements and attending hearings.

Witness citations will be sent to patients and families in August. Those giving evidence at a hearing will be contacted by their named team member in advance of the hearing to provide all the necessary information and help them prepare.

New directions and guidelines published

INQUIRY NEWS

Procedural hearing

Lord Brodie held the Inquiry's first procedural hearing on 22 June, where he set out the arrangements for the hearings starting in September.

The focus, as relayed by Counsel to the Inquiry, Alastair Duncan QC, will be to hear the experiences of patients and families and their perception of how events unfolded. It has been made clear that the Inquiry does not intend to challenge their version of events. The intention is to understand the human impact of the issues that arose.

You can read more about the focus of the upcoming hearings here or view a recording on our YouTube channel.

Visit to QEUH

The Inquiry visited the Queen Elizabeth University Hospital, Glasgow, in June as part of its ongoing investigations into the issues there. The visit included a tour of several wards that have been affected by ventilation and water contamination issues. This has provided Lord Brodie with a clearer understanding of the experiences of patients and families, some of which we will be hearing from in September. For more information on the visit, see here.

Focus of May 2022 hearings

Lord Brodie has issued guidance to Core Participants that the Inquiry will focus primarily on ventilation with regards to the Royal Hospital for Children and Young People in Edinburgh. This guidance is aimed at ensuring those with relevant information to the inquiry can provide it. Other issues may be considered as the investigation progresses.
